OUR MISSION

To record and share the stories, intentions, and impacts of emerging and established landscape architects.

Why?

As landscape architecture’s role expands to shape both physical and socioeconomic spaces, we can increase our contributions to environmental impact, social justice, and new roles yet to be seen by broadcasting the profession’s diverse voices and their associated discussions.

By capturing and expanding the dialogue of important issues within our field, we aim to amplify the current and future conversations that shape the ever-evolving field of landscape architecture.
A Must Listen for Landscape Architects

"From climate change and homelessness to sources of inspiration, design process and business planning, the Landscape Architecture Podcast delivers exceptional content that is equally engaging for people entering the profession, mid-career practitioners and seasoned veterans."

Just wanted to say I love the podcast

“I am a digital UX Designer, but have been contemplating getting a master’s in landscape architecture. This podcast definitely speaks to me and motivates me to learn even more about the subject matter and more than likely commit to the profession itself.”

Michael Todoran is a native West Los Angeles Angelino practicing landscape architecture in DTLA. He began his career in high end residential and has been fortunate enough to develop beautiful spaces in the smallest of backyards in Venice, California to large scale on structure projects throughout the world in Dubai, China, and Serbia. Michael is interested in discovering and sharing the stories of landscape architecture.

Joanna is interested in the intersection of landscape architecture and media as a potential to generate both design and communication tools. She has used a variety of media techniques, ranging from film to analytical drawings, to research and explore new landscapes ranging from Hong Kong to the Netherlands, Iceland, Colombia and India while pursuing a dual Master’s degree in Landscape Architecture and Architecture at the University of Pennsylvania. She moved to LA after graduating in 2015, and since then has become enamored and fascinated with the city.

Adriana’s interest in landscape architecture stems from her local Los Angeles roots. Growing up in South LA, communities depleted of accessible green space, Adriana has a strong interest in public space equity and is driven by her passion to explore ways public space enhances people’s lives and quality of living. She enjoys projects involving parks, public spaces, and community development that enable her to design spaces inspired by the local neighborhoods. Her advocacy for public space equality shines through in the work she does inside and outside the office.

Margaret is interested in learning about what makes other designers tick. She is a landscape designer, peace activist, and researcher based in Los Angeles, CA. Margaret holds a BFA in Industrial Design from Carnegie Mellon University and a dual M.Arch/MLA from the University of Pennsylvania.
